

The Richard III Foundation, Inc.

is pleased to offer two distinct opportunities in support of both the academic and local historian:

The Richard III Foundation Scholarship for Medieval Studies

The Richard III Foundation Scholarship is awarded annually to a student registered for a higher degree, based anywhere in the world, whose research is related to the Yorkist Period.

Applications will be considered from graduate students at all stages of study, including doctoral candidates who are seeking to fund an extension period.

Past recipients include David Santiuste, author of Edward IV and the Wars of the Roses, Lucy Rhymer and Professor Jackson Armstrong, now both teaching at major universities; Jennifer Ledfors, now a researcher at Royal Holloway, University of London; and Carolyn Donohue, who is now teaching at the University of York.

The John Davey Research Grant for Medieval Studies

The Research Grant was established to assist local historians and independent scholars with their research costs.

The grant is available to aid the study of a topic that is relevant to the late Fifteenth Century Yorkist period of 1450-1485, and especially focused on increasing the historical understanding of the reign of King Richard III. The research work must be in progress, and not completed or previously published.

“History is not about books and dates. It is about living, breathing people with all the faults and flaws, gifts and glamour that we see today”. - John Davey

Applications for both the Scholarship and the Research Grant are accepted through June 30th.
